

Glyphosate: alternatives exist, but major obstacles remain...

Germany could introduce a nationwide ban

On 27 November, the countries of the European Union narrowly passed a vote in favor of renewing glyphosate for the next five years.

At the request of the French government, the INRA (National institute for agronomic research) prepared a report on alternatives for glyphosate. This report presents a number of possible options that have already been tested on some farms, but does not state whether they could be generalized in the near future. It also provides a relevant overview of problems and issues that will affect countries where the herbicide is banned.
